

You don't have a website problem. You have a double-booking problem.

Here's what I heard when we spoke, and what I built to fix it.

“Parents currently find us through Facebook, word of mouth, and flyers, then text me to book; the manual texting can cause double-bookings.”

— Dana, ABC Tutoring

What that costs you today

Every booking is a back-and-forth conversation. The schedule lives in a Google Sheet you update by hand from tutors' texts. When two parents get offered the same time, you're the one apologising and rearranging.

What you asked for

- ✓ A home page, tutor listings, and a booking page
- ✓ Tutor photo, subjects, grade levels, rate, availability
- ✓ Collect the parent's details and the student's grade and subject
- ✓ A booked time should stop showing as available
- ✓ Clean and friendly — and simple on a phone
- ✓ No online payment — you invoice families yourself
- ✓ Parents who prefer it can still text you

WHAT I BUILT

Three pages. Booked in about a minute.

Built phone-first, because that's where your parents actually are.

All six tutors, side by side

Photo, subjects, grade levels, hourly rate, experience, and how many times they have open. Parents can filter by subject or search.

Experience shown up front

You mentioned parents always ask about it — so it's on every tutor card, not buried a click away.

No payment, no accounts

Parents don't sign up for anything, and nobody is asked for a card. You keep invoicing families the way you do now.

THE FIX

A booked time disappears. Immediately.

This is the part that ends the double-bookings.

You're booked!

We've sent the details to jamie@example.com. Dana will confirm by text before the session.

Tutor	Sofia Nguyen
When	Tue, Sep 8 at 3:30 PM
Format	In person

What the parent sees

You keep the personal touch

You told me you didn't want to lose parents who'd rather just text you — so “Text us” sits on every page, right next to the booking button. Nobody is forced online. And I'm counting how many people choose it, so in a month you'll know whether parents actually want the website or still prefer you.

Changes and cancellations still come to you

Exactly as they do today. The website only handles the part that was causing the collisions — claiming a time.

WHAT YOU'LL KNOW

Every question you asked me, answered on one screen.

“Which tutors do people look at?”	Views for every tutor
“Do they book, or do they leave?”	Booking rate, step by step
“Where do people leave before booking?”	The exact step they quit
“Where did they come from?”	Facebook · flyers · word of mouth
“Which subjects are they looking for?”	Ranked by demand
“Which tutors get viewed but rarely booked?”	Views compared to bookings
“How many still prefer to text me?”	Counted, not guessed

The one I'd watch. When a parent searches for a subject you don't teach, that search is recorded. In a month you'll have a ranked list of exactly what families are asking for that you can't staff yet — which tells you who to hire next.

Your three channels, counted separately

You get one link for your Facebook group, one for flyers, and one for word of mouth. Put the flyer link on a QR code and you'll finally know whether flyers are worth printing.

WHERE WE GO FROM HERE

A few calls I made for you — all easy to change.

You hadn't settled these yet, so I picked sensible defaults rather than stall.

60-minute sessions, booked one at a time

One simple slot length keeps the calendar readable. Recurring weekly slots would be a natural next step.

Two weeks of availability, confirmed instantly

I deliberately left out an approval step — approving each booking by hand would bring back the very texting you want rid of.

Placeholder tutor photos

Send me your real ones and they drop straight in. Nothing else changes.

Before a real launch

- ✓ A shared calendar. Right now availability is remembered per device — fine for trying it out, but two different families need to see the same one for real.
- ✓ Real confirmation emails and texts. The site shows the confirmation; sending it needs a small service behind it.
- ✓ Letting you edit tutors yourself — you mentioned wanting this, and it's the right thing to build second.

What success looks like in three months

Parents booking without the back-and-forth, and you knowing which subjects families keep asking for — in your words.